Getting 'Ready' for Energy Efficiency

written by Lauri Moon | January 19, 2021

The 50001 Ready program provides a self-paced process for organizations to build energy awareness and increase the energy efficiency of their facilities. The 50001 Ready program provides companies with the framework needed to reduce energy and costs. The program makes the energy savings associated with the principles of the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) 50001 accessible to organizations without formal certification through no-cost guidance, tools, and protocols.

During this webinar, Ethan Rogers, Technology Manager at the Department of Energy, will review the first steps in the 50001 Ready process. This webinar will focus on creating an energy team, developing a baseline, establishing goals and more. These steps are an important start towards achieving long term energy targets for your facility.
