

ISO 45001 and Mental Health: Yes, It's In The Standard!

written by Lauri Moon | July 13, 2020

Did you know the ISO 45001 standard includes responsibility expectations and requirements to protect and promote the mental health of workers? In this interactive session, EHS Consultants, Rick Gehrke and Steve Ciaverilla, look at the applicable definitions and requirements, talk about audit trails and interactions between system processes, and look at the benefits to organizations that can come from harnessing the full power of their management systems to pursue continual improvement in mental health performance.

Speaker Bio

Rick Gehrke, Senior EHS Consultant Consultant, Intertek Alchemy

Rick is a certified management systems Lead Auditor with experience in ISO 14001, OHSAS 18001, ISO 45001, ISO 50001, LEED green building certification, business development, and certification program management. Rick earned his Associate of Applied Science in Intelligence Collection from the Community College of the Air Force and his Bachelor and Master of Science degrees in Environmental Science from the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga.

Register