

Workplace Safety and Success in a Post-Pandemic World

written by Lauri Moon | August 27, 2020

The return to traditional workplaces has uncovered many risks in the time of COVID-19. Business leaders are facing questions about what the future of workplace safety looks like and how they can best respond to the challenges at hand to support employees. When it comes to safety, protecting your workforce and ensuring business continuity are one and the same.

Join National Safety Council (NSC) President and CEO Lorraine Martin, and Intalex Senior Product Marketing Manager Aaron Davis for valuable insights from the Safe Actions for Employee Returns - or SAFER - task force. Attendees will get an inside view on the latest resources available - developed with input from Fortune 500 companies, non-profit organizations and public health experts - on how to support and keep employees safe in a post-pandemic world. Register now and learn:

- How to build flexibility into your business continuity planning with tools like vulnerability assessments, employee surveys, playbooks to align safety with business objectives etc.
- Key recommendations based on best practices and proven workplace safety strategies
- How companies can prepare and protect their workforces as they return to work - and from a possible second wave - by implementing strict controls through key applications

Intalex is proud to be a member of the NSC task force to support the SAFER: Safe Actions for Employee Returns initiative. The SAFER task force is focused on developing and delivering a comprehensive, multi-faceted plan to guide employers through the process of safely resuming work and operations now and in a post-pandemic environment.
